WELCOME TO WKND

MATT JUUL, BOSTON FEATURES EDITOR

We can't believe it, either, but November is already here. While we're still recovering from the Halloween sugar rush, that doesn't mean we have to spend the entire weekend sitting on the couch (unless you still need to binge watch "Stranger Things," that is). From partying with Pedro Martinez to having a laugh with Cameron Esposito and Rhea Butcher, there are plenty of fun ways to spend your time off. Kick off the month right with these awesome events this weekend.

MURAKAMI AT THE MFA

Stop by the Museum of Fine Arts and check out "Lineage of Eccentrics" by acclaimed Japanese artist Takashi Murakami. Here are three reasons why you can't miss this awesome new exhibit. For more, see page 10.

CAMERON AND RHEA BRING THE LAUGHS

2 Cameron Esposito and Rhea Butcher are ready to bring the house down at the Wilbur on Saturday night. We chatted with the comedy couple to see what they have planned for their latest trip to the Hub. For more, see page 6.

PARTY WITH PEDRO

3 Hall of Fame pitcher and former Red Sox ace Pedro Martinez is back in Boston for his second annual charity gala to raise money for victims of the recent hurricanes. We caught up with the beloved baseball star ahead of Friday night's event. For more, see page 4.

5 THINGS TO DO

BREWS AND ZOO IN THE SEAPORT

4 Head to the Seaport this weekend for a fun day of cute critters and delicious brews. Sip Trillium while hanging out with baby goats and other adorable petting-zoo animals. For more, see page 7.

HIP-HOP'S HOTTEST NEW STAR HITS THE HUB

5 Indonesian rapper Brian Imanuel, aka Rich Chigga, is hip-hop's brightest new star and plans to take Boston by storm when his tour stops in the city on Friday night. See what the buzz is about and find out more awesome events happening in the Hub this weekend. For more, see pages 8-9.

Nobody enjoys an IV insertion, but having a nurse who specializes in this skill can make things better.

So why does Tufts Medical Center refuse to hire more of these highly specialized nurses?

Today's hospital patients are sicker than ever and, as a result, almost all of them require some sort of intravenous or vascular-access therapy.

But the very fact that patients are now so seriously ill often hinders a nurse's ability to complete, for example, a smooth IV insertion. A patient's age, weight, diagnosis, hospitalization history, and exposure to certain kinds of medications can make the process painful, stressful, and complicated for everyone.

That's why most hospitals have a dedicated team of highly specialized, trained RNs to help with complicated IV insertions. Nurses on these teams complete intravenous insertions as quickly as possible and with as little stress to the patient as possible.

Tufts Medical Center does not have enough of these highly specialized RNs, and they won't commit to contract language guaranteeing that a team of these RNs will be hired and made available to patients at peak hours. Until that happens, Tufts patients will experience a delay in care while waiting for their IV insertions and related medicines. And with that will come unnecessary stress, pain, and risk of complications.

This was one of the reason the Tufts RNs went on strike in July. It's one of the reasons they're picketing today. And it's one of the reasons they're still at the negotiating table.

Tufts: Listen to your nurses, and commit in the contract to bringing specialized nursing teams to the hospital.

Pedro Martinez calls for unity to help Puerto Rico, Dominican Republic

The former Red Sox ace is hosting a gala in Boston to benefit hurricane victims.

MATT JUUL

In the wake of hurricanes Harvey, Irma and Maria, professional athletes like J.J. Watt and Tim Duncan are answering the call to help those affected by the devastating storms.

Pedro Martinez plans to do his part this weekend when he hosts his 2nd annual charity gala at the Colonnade Hotel in Boston on Friday night. The event will raise funds for the former Red Sox ace's nonprofit organization, as well as aid victims of the recent hurricanes.

The Hall of Fame pitcher will be joined by several of his close baseball friends at the gala, including David Ortiz, Jason Varitek, Orlando Cabrera, Vladimir Guerrero, Jose Reyes, Jeurys Familia and more. While Martinez tells Metro that he expects the evening to be a fun soiree, he also notes that the struggles of Puerto Rico and his home country of the Dominican Republic will weigh heavily on guests minds, as many MLB players hail from areas hit by the storms.

"People don't understand, really, the devastation that there is when a storm like that passes by a country," Martinez says. "Puerto Rico has been going from bad to worse. I'm just hoping that we continue to give them the support."

The former World Series champion reveals he has seen some of the devastation firsthand, particularly in the northern parts of the Dominican Republic.

Carolina and Pedro Martinez PROVIDED

"They really got it, especially by the waters," Martinez says. "What happens when the sea comes in, everything is made of iron gets damaged, plus what happened to the little houses. You don't have very good houses over there."

Martinez admits, though, that his home country wasn't as badly affected by the storms as Puerto Rico. He hopes to use his star power to help in the U.S. territory's recovery efforts.

"After watching Puerto Rico, I must say we were really lucky to actually get away with so little damage being done to the Dominican Republic," Martinez says. "I'm looking forward to also helping out in Puerto Rico with Carlos Beltran and those guys. They're really working hard, trying to rebuild Puerto Rico."

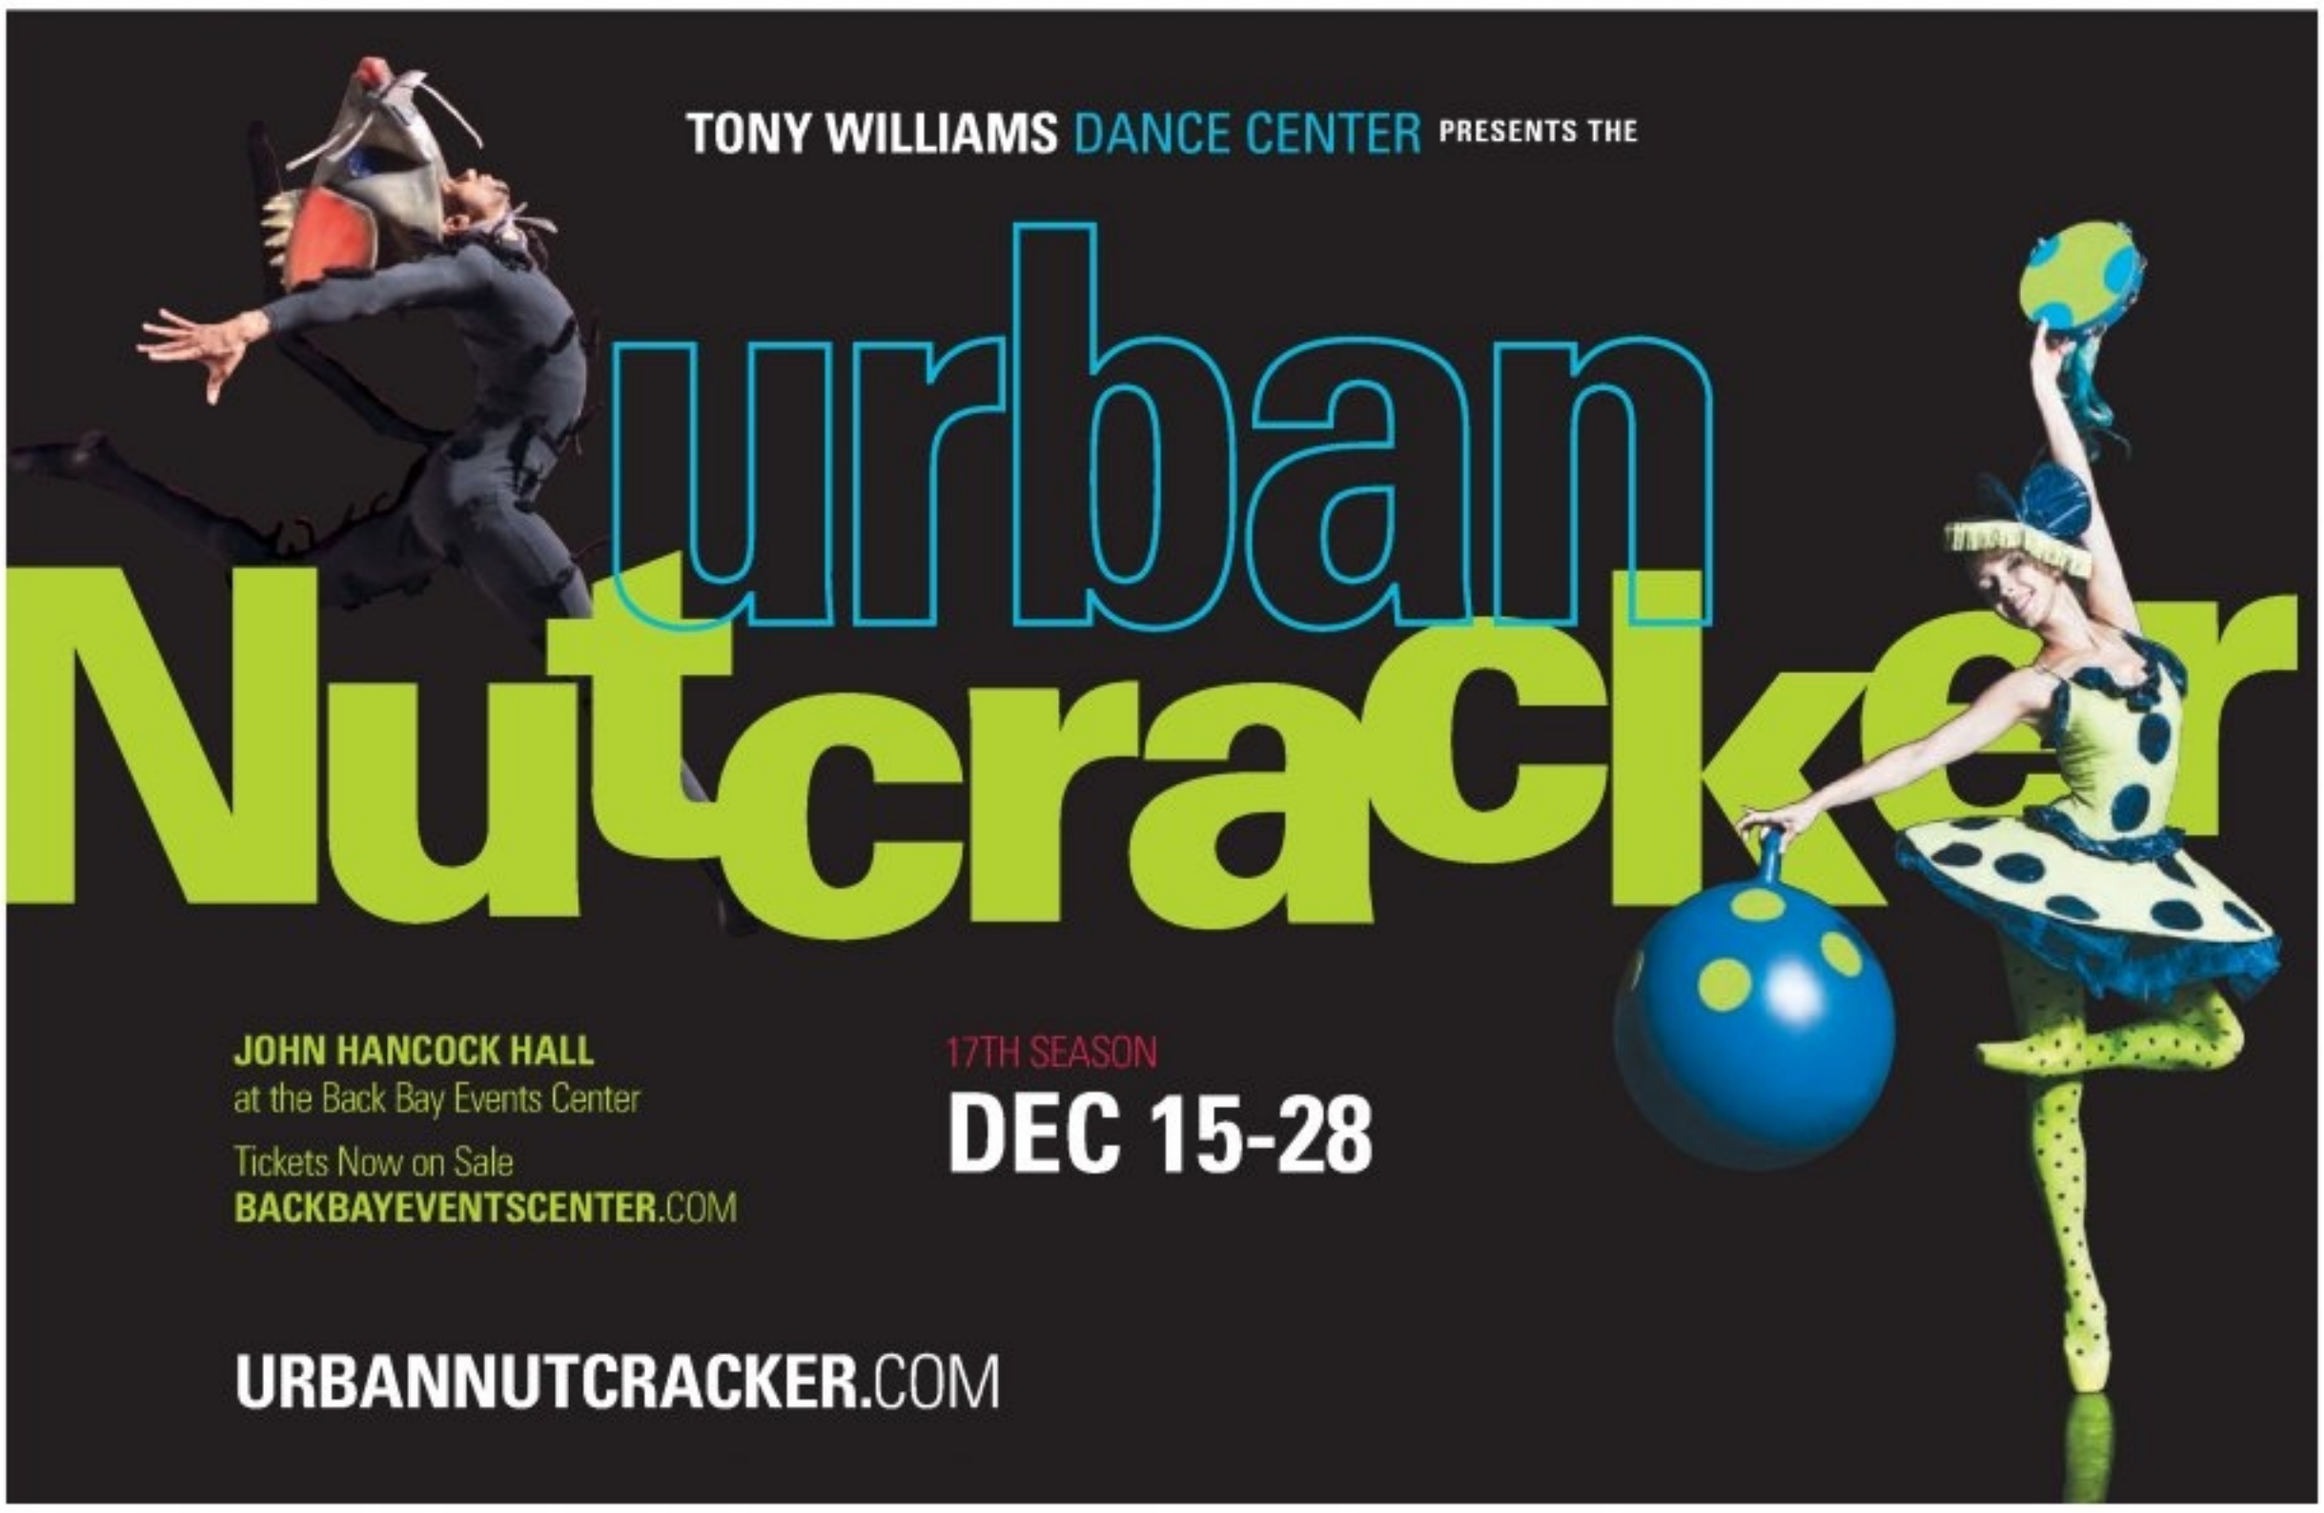
While President Donald Trump has been criticized for his response to the crisis in Puerto Rico, Martinez doesn't believe that any one person in particular deserves blame. Instead, the former Red Sox star is calling on the world to unite and tackle this problem together.

If you go:

Nov. 3, Colonnade Boston Hotel, 120 Huntington Ave., Boston, pedromartinezcharity.com

"It's not just one leader taking over saying this is going to be done," Martinez says. "It takes everybody to be united and, in these difficult moments, it's even more important that we all get together and really push."

"I remember listening to the song 'We Are the World' for Africa, and I think that's what we need to do right now," he adds. "We are the world, and we all need to get together and give it a push and feel for your [fellow] human being like you feel for yourself."



Joey O'Donnell Film Premiere brings 'Molly's Game' to Mass.

Get a first look at the movie and help out a good cause. MATT JUUL

Joe and Kathy O'Donnell's annual Joey O'Donnell Film Premiere returns this weekend for an evening of food, fun and a special movie screening.

Now in its 33rd year, the event raises funds for the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation in honor of the couple's son Joey, who passed away after a battle with the disease. Following their son's death, Joe and Kathy created the Joey Fund in 1986 and have raised more than $100 million for cystic fibrosis research.

The couple hosts a film premiere each year at the Natick Mall's Neiman Marcus Court, where attendees get a first look at a Hollywood flick before anyone else has the chance to see it. This year's event, which takes place Nov. 5, features a screening of director Aaron Sorkin's "Molly's Game," starring Jessica Chastain, Idris Elba and Kevin Costner.

Proceeds from the event will go towards finding a cure for cystic fibrosis. PROVIDED

"The Boston community has supported the Joey Fund and so many other charitable efforts for nearly 40 years, " says Joe. "Without this collective effort over a very long time, the impending CF cure doesn't exist."

The festivities will also include tasty bites courtesy of Porcini's, Kowloon, Piantedosi Baking Company, Trade, Italcrust, Grill 23 & Bar and other local restaurants. More than 1,000 people are expected to attend this year's film premiere.

Cameron Esposito and Rhea Butcher on the political power of stand-up

Cameron Esposito and Rhea Butcher perform at the Wilbur on Sautday night. PROVIDED

The married comedy duo performs in Boston this weekend.

MATT JUUL

Get ready for a double dose of comedy as Cameron Esposito and Rhea Butcher are bringing their "Back to Back" tour to town Saturday night. The married stand-up stars are psyched to be back in the Hub, especially Esposito, who studied at Boston College. Ahead of their show this weekend, we caught up with the outspoken duo to see what they have planned for their latest Boston visit, their thoughts on the role of comedy in 2017 and more.

Have any fun plans for your trip to Boston?

Esposito: Do I want to go have a burrito at Anna's Taqueria? Of course. Do I want to go get a cannoli at Modern Pastry? Yes. Will I probably make Rhea run around the Common — actually, you know what, I do have an answer to this. I lived in Massachusetts when Massachusetts became the first state to legalize same-sex marriage. I had been going to the statehouse to advocate for queer folks, so it was amazing when the ruling happened. The last time we were in Boston, I walked Rhea past City Hall, and was just unbelievably struck by the fact that I got to be there at that time and be a part of that. It's very close to the Wilbur. We could walk there. I think we should.

Both of you have talked about feeling needed to perform in cities outside of the "liberal bubble." What's the motivation behind that?

Butcher: I think the bubble is an easy explanation to people to think, "Oh, you haven't been paying enough attention." The only bubbles are people who aren't interacting with each other. We're talking not just about cities, we're talking about rural areas where people might have a particular view, but they only have that view because they're not actually interacting with human beings that are of that view. We're trying to have the same conversation in all the places. Especially now, I don't believe in the idea of preaching to the choir.

What role does comedy play during such politically divisive times?

Butcher: Comedy's place now can be two-fold. You can retreat into comedy and get a respite from everything that's going on and sort of lose yourself in that moment. But at the same time, comedy is always a powerful tool for taking down these sorts of monoliths of thought.

Esposito: Art destroys the power structure; otherwise, it's propaganda. That's like the point of art, right? It has to destroy a power structure. There have been moments where the power structure was maybe a little or a lot less overtly sinister. Sometimes you're just destroying the power structure of cable television. "Why do we have so many remotes?" But right now, with somebody in power who really doesn't care about creating tension, who actually thrives on it and is deliberately trying to do it, you cannot avoid it as a comic. You have to stand and battle back.

Sip on Trillium and hang out with baby goats in the Seaport

Meet some cute critters at Zoo & Brew this weekend. CHARLIE WOLFSON

Hang out with baby goats. ISTOCK

Halloween may be in the rearview mirror, but there's still plenty of time to enjoy the fall season in Boston. This weekend, the Seaport will host Zoo & Brew, an autumn celebration designed to accommodate parents and children alike.

On Saturday, grab the kids and head to Sea Green on Stillings Street for a free day of fun. The festivities include an appearance by Animal Affair Traveling Petting Zoo, featuring baby goats, chickens, chicks, bunnies and piglets.

If you didn't get to check out the Trillium Brewing Company's beer garden on the Greenway this year, fans will have another chance to sip on the popular Boston brews outside at this weekend's event. For those in attendance over the age of 21, Trillium will have a craft beer bar set up so you can enjoy some libations.

WS Development, the development company that's hosting Zoo & Brew, is in the process of transforming 23 acres of waterfront land in the Seaport area into a blend of residential, hotel, office, retail, entertainment, civic and cultural projects. They hope events like this weekend's festivities will help strengthen the neighborhood's family-friendly appeal.

Grab a drink at Trillium's beer bar. PROVIDED

In addition to the brews and cute critters, the event will also feature live music, plus food and drink samples from new Seaport eateries such as Tuscan Kitchen, La Colombe Coffee Roasters Juice Press, Ben & Jerry's and Kings Dining and Entertainment.

YOUR WEEKEND STARTS NOW

THEATER

"Cabaret"

Boston University students perform this legendary musical about the slinky world of Weimar Germany. Struggling to find happiness in demoralized, economically depressed Berlin, our heroes live lives of not-so-quiet desperation as the shoots of fascism begin to spout around them. But, with life as grim as it is, there's all the more reason to take in a good show. Nov. 2-4, Tsai Performance Center, 685 Commonwealth Ave., $8-$12, bostonuniversityonbroadway.com

MOVIES

"The Love Witch"

If you need a little more Halloween, we suggest this crazy, campy horror-comedy from last year, about a witch whose spells can snare any man she wants—but all she really wants is to be truly wanted. It all takes place in a ridiculous, low-budget '60s-'70s film universe.

Nov. 2, 7 p.m., Paramount Center, 559 Washington St., free, web. emerson.edu/brightlights

SHOPPING

Boston Christmas Festival

The Christmas season used to start after Thanksgiving, but now it's after Halloween. Too early? Maybe, but is it ever too early to get that shopping done? You could start at the annual Boston Christmas Festival, a wonderland of artisanal holiday gifts and decorations. Kids get in free, and you can also see a gingerbread house competition between some of Boston's top chefs. Nov. 3-5, Seaport World Trade Center, 1 Seaport Lane, $15, bostonchristmasfestival.com

Massachusetts Cheese Festival

This is the event for cheese lovers, but, of course, there isn't just cheese, because cheese usually goes best on or with other things. Wine, beer, cider, pickles, jam, honey, bread and more await your palate here, plus demos on pairings and cheese-making from some of the region's top producers.
Nov. 4, 11:30 a.m. and 2:30 p.m., The Armory, 191 Highland Ave., Somerville, $40, macheesefest.org

COMEDY

Laura Hall and Friends

Wayne Brady's ability to spontaneously belt out very real-sounding yet totally ridiculous songs on "Whose Line is It Anyway?" always seemed particularly superhuman. But he had expert assistance in pianist Laura Hall, calmly laying down whatever was needed, playing cool straight woman to the show's very silly man. She's appearing in Boston Friday night for—what else?—an evening of musical improv.
Nov. 3, 10 p.m., ImprovBoston, 40 Prospect St., $18, improvboston.com

MUSIC

Rich Chigga

Rich Chigga, real name Brian Imanuel, is a Chinese-Indonesian MC who went viral in 2016 with his hilarious, suburban-kid-posing-like-a-gangster video for "Dat $tick." He's almost like the Yung Lean of Indonesia, except he can really rap. Nov. 3, 10:30 p.m., Bijou, 51 Stuart St., $20, 21+, tickets.bijouboston.com

Courtney Barnett and Kurt Vile

The '90s gave us Kurt Cobain and Courtney Love, the married king and queen of chaotic, angst-soaked alt rock, but the '10s have produced are Kurt Vile and Courtney Barnett, platonic pals who make really nice, mellow music together. Less edgy than their forebears for sure, but not duller for it.
Nov. 4, 7:30 p.m., Orpheum Theatre, 1 Hamilton Pl., $53+, ticketmaster.com

Janet Jackson

Janet, the youngest of the legendary Jacksons, became the family's second-biggest star, breaking in 1986 with the album "Control" and enjoying over decade of provocative relevance with the subsequent albums "Rhythm Nation," "Janet." and "The Velvet Rope," all praised for their fusions of contemporary styles and socially conscious lyrics. She also, apparently, puts on a hell of a show.
Nov. 5, 8 p.m., TD Garden, 100 Legends Way, $26+, ticketmaster.com

FUN AND GAMES

Hipster Olympics

Play a bunch of fun/silly games for a good cause at this event, including sumo suit wrestling, cornhole, bucket pong, Polish horseshoes, ladderball, giant Jenga and spike ball. Not sure how "hipster" that stuff is (what about vinyl-crate digging, or pickling, or dodging calls from student-loan debt collectors?) but that's no matter. Proceeds benefit the McKay School in East Boston.

3 Reasons why you have to see the MFA's Takashi Murakami exhibit

It's a combination of artsy fun and classic masterpieces. ZIPPORAH OSEI

"Takashi Murakami: Lineage of Eccentrics" at the Museum of Fine Arts combines the quirky works of the renowned Japanese artist with the historic Japanese masterpieces that came before him. If the colorful ads all over the city haven't already gotten you to check it out, here are three reasons why should take a trip over to the MFA to see this exhibit.

1 Old meets new
The MFA has the most expansive collection of Japanese art outside of Japan, which makes it the best place in the country to compare Murakami's work with the historical pieces that inspired him. There are over 30 works from the MFA's Japanese collection included in "Lineage of Eccentrics."

2 Massive masterpieces
In the last room of the exhibit hangs a 59-foot composition titled "Dragon in Clouds — Red Mutation." The piece was created by Murakami in just 24 hours as response to a "Battle Royale"-style challenge from his mentor, Professor Tsuji. In the same room you'll find the piece it's inspired by, "Dragon and Clouds," a 35-foot work created by Soga Shōhaku in 1763.

3 A glimpse into the past
Some rarely displayed works are featured in the show, such as the 23-foot-long "Night Attack on the Sanjō Palace." Completed in the 13th century, it depicts the most powerful battle scene in all of Japanese art.

16-year-old shot, killed in Jamaica Plain

The death punctuated a debate on funding for a youth-violence-prevention program. STATE HOUSE NEWS SERVICE

A 16-year-old boy is dead after a late-night shooting Tuesday in Jamaica Plain, Boston Police said.

Police officers and EMTs responded to a radio call reporting shots fired in the area of 944 Parker St. in Jamaica Plain at 11:47 p.m., police said, and found the 16-year-old male victim suffering from gunshot wounds.

He was transported to an area hospital, where he was pronounced dead. WBZ Radio reported Wednesday that police officials believe a fight between two groups led to the fatal shooting.

"We've got to stop the senseless violence," Boston Police Commissioner William Evans said after the shooting, according to the Boston Globe.

House Ways and Means Chairman Jeffrey Sanchez, in whose district the shooting took place, has been pushing for funding for a youth-violence-prevention program known as the Safe and Successful Youth Initiative in a budget bill that the House and Senate are negotiating.

"Instead of wasting time on procedural matters, we should be working on important policy and fiscal matters," Sanchez said earlier this month, accusing senators of causing an "unnecessary delay" with the budget bill. "In my neighborhood, I have guns blazing. That SSYI money makes a difference. It goes to the issue of urban youth violence."

The House included $4.7 million for SSYI in its version of the supplemental budget bill, but the Senate included none. Senate Ways and Means Chairwoman Karen Spilka has said she will not include fiscal 2018 money, like the SSYI funding, in the fiscal 2017 close-out budget.

The News Service reported Tuesday that a person familiar with the budget bill negotiations said the Senate made an offer of "substantial funding" for SSYI that was rejected by the House.

Tito Jackson (pictured) and Mayor Walsh's race ends Nov. 7, 2017. GETTY IMAGES

Tito Jackson turns up the heat ahead of election

Could the city councilor go from underdog to top dog in the mayor's race? Soon, Boston voters will decide. SAMANTHA J. GROSS

As the Boston mayoral election inches closer, City Councilor Tito Jackson is, in his words, "turning up."

The councilor is looking to boost awareness of the race after a dismal turnout in the preliminary election. Incumbent opponent Mayor Martin J. Walsh took 63 percent of votes Sept. 26, while Jackson took just 29 percent of the mere 56,000 ballots cast.

The debates have been lively, and some say they even signal a shift for the mostly sleepy mayoral contest. Do you think they will help turnout come next week? Are two debates enough?

I do believe people are more interested now. But I believe that the mayor has suppressed the vote by limiting debates. To have 120 minutes of debates in a major American city, laying out the future of the city of Boston — two hours is unacceptable.

In the debate you discussed your plan to dismantle the Boston Planning and Development Agency. What would that entail?

That involves democratizing planning and abolishing the BPDA, which is not a city agency. It's not required to be transparent and the dollars do not go into the city operating budget. I'll put forward professional planning department that prospectively plans for humans, not developers and builders. I will be the mayor that stands up for the working middle class of Boston.

You also said you want to make the School Committee an elected body as part of a general overhaul of City Hall. Why is that?

We are the only city or town in the state of Massachusetts that does not have a democratically elected school committee. The people of the city of Boston should be able to have a say in the Boston Public Schools funding and envision for the future.

The failure of Mayor Walsh is that in the best of economic times in the city of Boston, we are underfunding the schools. A budget is a value statement. I take issue with putting corporations over classrooms. We need to look at our schools as an asset, not a liability.

In the debate, you also addressed a gap in the city's communities, calling it the "two Bostons" If you were mayor, what would a bridge between that gap look like?

A bridge between two Bostons would include an educational system that is not a lottery that has winners and losers. We would have a great public school in every neighborhood. It would be a city where we have a concerted effort to build housing people can actually afford, and not checking a box that says "a unit is a unit is a unit."

It would be a city where we respect the lives of our diverse communities, where the life expectancy of neighborhoods that have been left behind goes up. The housing that we're building exacerbates segregation in Boston. We would have a transportation infrastructure that deals with these disparities.

The reason why I do this work is about opening doors of opportunity to everybody, not just some people.

A deadly delicious way to use leftover Halloween candy from Adam Richman

So good, it'll haunt your dreams. LINNEA ZIELINSKI

Celebrity chef Adam Richman created an exclusive recipe for Metro. GETTY IMAGES

Adam Richman wants you to know that there's a better way to enjoy that Halloween candy than straight from the wrapper.

Metro talked to Adam Richman, TV personality, culinary traveler and author of "Straight Up Tasty," about how everything from gummy bears to Mars bars, Smarties to Snickers, can be repurposed into recipes well worth saving some leftover Halloween candy for.

Although it might be the hardest to save, Richman says chocolate is his favorite leftover Halloween candy to transform. "It's versatile and can be made savory or can remain sweet," he said.

And he backed that up with an exclusive mole recipe for Metro, which uses Hershey's minis to create a savory supper.

You'll transport your taste buds in a Latin adventure with this sauce that can be drizzled on everything from veggies and tofu to chicken and steak.

Check out the savory recipes Richman created exclusively for Metro online at Metro.us.

INSTRUCTIONS

Ahead of time, take Mr. Goodbar miniatures and dark chocolate miniatures and place them in the freezer until frozen solid.

Preheat oven to 300°F. Either using raw, unseasoned store-bought seeds or removing seeds from a fresh pumpkin, wash and clean them. Pat the seeds dry, toss in the tablespoon of olive oil and melted butter and toast them on a sheet pan in the oven for 45 to 50 minutes. Let cool.

Once the pumpkin seeds are cooled, chop them up. Do not chop too fine. In a saucepan, heat enough olive oil to cover the bottom of the pan by roughly a quarter of an inch. You may not need to use all of the oil depending upon what type of chile you are using or the size of your pan.

When the oil is hot, add in the crushed garlic cloves, yellow onion, cumin, coriander, chopped dried chile, and chopped red bell pepper. Season with salt and cracked black pepper. Stir thoroughly for approximately seven minutes.

When dried chile is moist and wilted and the onions are translucent, reduce heat to low. While the sauce is simmering, take the frozen chocolate bars, unwrap, and blitz thoroughly in food processor. Add nutty chocolate mixture to pan and stir continuously.

If mixture starts to clump or seize at all, add in chicken stock or canned chicken broth a spoonful at a time to thin it out. When the mixture is smooth, stir in chopped pumpkin seeds.

When the sauce is combined, you can use your homemade mole sauce with slices of chicken breast, shrimp, chunks of firm white fleshed fish, or even portobello mushrooms. Put the protein of your choice into the sauce — taking care not to overload the pan — and simmer till the protein or vegetables are cooked through. You can also pour into a container and store in fridge.

INGREDIENTS

- 7-9 Mr. Goodbar miniatures (Tip: For a less rich, more spicy and bittersweet type of chocolate flavor, switch out up to three of the Mr. Goodbar miniatures for the same amount of Special Dark miniatures)
- 2 Hershey's Special Dark miniatures
- ¾ cup raw pumpkin seeds
- ⅓ cup and 1 tablespoon olive oil
- 1½ tablespoons butter, melted
- 4 garlic gloves, crushed
- ½ yellow onion, chopped finely
- ¼ teaspoon cumin
- ¼ teaspoon coriander
- 1 dried pasilla chile or chile de arbol, chopped finely (Tip: If not available, canned chipotle is a good alternative)
- 1 red bell pepper
- 1 - 1½ cup chicken stock or canned chicken broth
- Salt
- Black pepper

‘Now is not the time to live in fear’: NYPD commissioner

City officials shared new details about the terror attack by Sayfullo Saipov in lower Manhattan and urged New Yorkers to remain resilient. NIKKI M. MASCALI

The day after Sayfullo Saipov drove a rented truck down a bike path on the west side of lower Manhattan, killing eight people and injuring 12 others, city officials urged New Yorkers to remain vigilant — and fearless — in the face of terrorism.

“Now is not the time to live in fear, to be fearful. It’s time to be strong as we always are,” NYPD Commissioner James O’Neill said at a news conference Wednesday morning.

Mayor Bill de Blasio echoed that sentiment.

“This was an attack on the United States of America and New York and our people. It was the definition of terrorism,” de Blasio said. “This was an attack on our values, an effort to break our spirit, but it failed. New York City is a strong and resilient place.”

Despite its tragic outcome, Gov. Andrew Cuomo, who called Saipov a “depraved coward,” agreed the attack was unsuccessful at its core.

“The effort was to disrupt us, to terrorize us, to create mayhem. It failed,” he said. “The Halloween parade was a beautiful example of the failure of the attempt.”

Just hours after the terrorist attack, New York’s annual Halloween parade went on as planned, with more than 1 million people — and a ramped-up police presence — in attendance. New Yorkers can expect to see increased patrols across the city, NYPD Chief of Department Carlos Gomez said.

“You’ll see a lot more officers on trains, on platforms,” he said. “They should expect more bag checks at more stations, more explosive-detecting canines at stations.”

“The effort was to disrupt us, to terrorize us, to create mayhem. It failed.”

Gov. Andrew Cuomo

As for the New York City Marathon on Sunday, Gomez said the NYPD will have its “most ever” deployment, with more rooftop observation teams, sand trucks, blocker vehicles and cops in civilian attire mixing with the expected 2.5 million spectators. There will also be a “large number” of canines and counterterrorism officers and helicopter patrols.

According to FDNY Commissioner Daniel Nigro, three of the 12 injured in Tuesday’s attack have been released while nine remain in critical but stable condition. Injuries ranged from a bilateral amputation to several serious body traumas.

Who is Sayfullo Saipov, the NYC terrorist? Here’s what we know

Sayfullo Saipov, 29, hit multiple victims with a rental truck Tuesday afternoon, killing eight people and injuring at least 12 others.

Saipov was in custody at Bellevue Hospital on Manhattan’s East Side after being shot and arrested by police. Saipov is reportedly an Uzbek citizen who has been in the United States on a green card since 2010.

20 MILES

SAIPOV WAS LIVING IN PATERSON, NEW JERSEY, JUST ABOUT 20 MILES FROM NYC, AT THE TIME OF THE ATTACK.

His ID said he was from Tampa, Florida.

Saipov moved to the U.S. about five or six years ago, Dilnoza Abdusamatova told The Washington Post. Abdusamatova said he stayed with her family in Cincinnati for his first two weeks in the U.S.

Saipov headed to Florida to start a trucking business, Abdusamatova said, adding that she believes he got married and may now have two children.

Saipov eventually moved to Paterson, New Jersey, just about 20 miles from New York City, where he became an Uber driver. An official of the ride-hailing service told the Times that Saipov had passed its background check.

Pretty in pink

Komodo National Park is pretty in pink. GETTY IMAGES

Millennial pink may be trendy, but these places were rockin' the hue first.

Fodor's Travel

Balos Bay

Legend has it that the sand at this Greek beach is pink due to the blood of thousands of Turks who died in battle. In reality, it's the abundance of crushed seashells that make the hidden lagoon on this picturesque Crete outpost so pink. The cliff views are surreal and there's an ancient Venetian castle nearby. The waters are warm, shallow, and family-friendly, but go early in the morning to avoid crowds. There are no amenities, so bring your own food and water and shade umbrellas if needed.

Pekelemeer Lake

The shocking pink waters of Pekelmeer Lake in Bonaire pop out of the blue like a mirage and are flanked by blindingly white mountains of salt that look like snow. The water is colored by the abundance of tiny brine shrimp that flourish within them. These shrimp attract more pink delights — flocks of Caribbean flamingos that number in the thousands and congregate to feast on the tiny crustaceans.

Lake Hillier

While most foreigners who make the giant leap across the ocean to explore Australia come to see the outback and the Great Barrier Reef, the breathtaking natural beauty of Western Australia is nothing to shake a stick at. Lake Hillier is a perfect example of Western Australia's lesser-known hidden gems; the pink salt water in this lake looks like something out of a fairy tale! Among other microorganisms, researchers attribute the bubblegum color of the lake to a type of microalgae that thrives in salty conditions called dunaliella salina. The rare algae produce a pinkish-red dye to help it better absorb sunlight under the water.

Pink Beach (Pantai Merah)

The UNESCO World Heritage Site of Komodo National Park in Indonesia is the perfect stopover for nature lovers visiting Indonesia.

Here, the soft, blushing sand and crystal-clear waters make it the ideal place to snap some envy-inducing vacation photos before delving into world-class snorkeling along the reef. Yet again, our microscopic friends (foraminifera) are responsible for the dazzling pink sands on this beach.

These tiny organisms turn the coral red, and when red coral particles crumble off into the sea, they mix with the white sand, and just like magic, it morphs into a pretty pink beach.

Hutt Lagoon

The Magenta ponds near Perth, Australia aren't exactly the spot to visit for your next beach vacation, but they are stunning to view from an airplane. As the largest beta-carotene farm on earth, Hutt Lagoon uses these salty pink algae ponds to manufacture vitamin supplements, pill casings, and food dye, among other things.

You may not have heard of beta-carotene but you've surely consumed it. It's the scientific name for the brightly colored pigment that gives vegetables such as carrots and sweet potatoes their vibrant shades of orange and red. Not only is it used as an organic food coloring agent, but also when ingested, beta-carotene turns into vitamin A, which is great for your skin and eyesight.

Patriots did what they had to do

OPINION

DANNY PICARD
@dannypicard

Tom Brady, right, is going nowhere while Jimmy Garoppolo is getting a fresh start on the West Coast. GETTY IMAGES

The New England Patriots did what they had to do.

They traded their backup quarterback for a second-round draft pick, which, without describing any of the other details, is a pretty good return for somebody who never even plays.

When you do sprinkle in all the other factors, it becomes even more obvious: sending Jimmy Garoppolo to San Francisco was a good trade for both teams.

But sticking with the trade from a Patriots perspective, it's been alarming to see the amount of negative feedback this move has received, from fans and the media. It's a product of the hype that's surrounded Garoppolo since he was drafted by the Patriots in the second round (62nd overall) of the 2014 NFL Draft.

This was his fourth season in New England. And it was going to be his last, whether the Patriots traded him or not.

Garoppolo, 26, is a free agent in the offseason. That means he holds all the leverage, come March, and will look to sign with a team that won't just guarantee him a starting quarterback job, but will also pay him the type of money that goes along with that role. Given Tom Brady's continued success as the Patriots' starting quarterback, it should be clear why Garoppolo wouldn't choose to return to New England in 2018.

The Patriots — while still holding all the leverage leading up to Tuesday's trade deadline — had a decision to make. It was one of three options: trade Brady and sign Garoppolo to a long-term lucrative contract, keep both quarterbacks and give Garoppolo the franchise tag in 2018, or trade Garoppolo for something better than the third-round compensation pick they'd receive when he did sign elsewhere.

Bill Belichick chose the trade. And for a second-round pick nonetheless.

Out of those three options, the trade was always the most logical choice. That's why Adam Schefter's repeated reports in which he stressed "the Patriots are not moving Garoppolo" made little to no sense.

Schefter was so adamant about it that the public — and those in the NFL — bought in, and they bought in hard. They saw Schefter as a respected journalist who wouldn't continue to report this if it wasn't true. It made people believe Garoppolo would be taking over for Brady sooner rather than later. But even crazier than all of that, it made people question Brady's future.

And I'm sorry, but if you think the Patriots should have traded Brady before Tuesday at 4 p.m., then you need some serious help. Also, if you wanted to see Belichick slap a $25 million franchise tag onto his backup QB, then I'm convinced you've been brainwashed.

You think it's a good idea to either trade Brady, or pay Garoppolo $25 million next season as Brady's backup? You're out of your mind if you think either of those two options are smart ones.

So they had to trade him. And they had to do it before Tuesday at 4.

Thanks to Schefter's insistent reporting on the situation, the Patriots didn't lose any leverage leading up to the trade deadline. In fact, Garoppolo's availability came as a "surprise" to the 49ers, according to coach Kyle Shanahan. So, to no surprise here, Schefter was the one who broke the news of the trade.

Given Garoppolo's situation, and Brady's elite status with the first-place Patriots, this trade really shouldn't surprise anybody.

The Patriots did what they had to do. They traded their backup quarterback, and added an early second-round pick in the process.

Not sure how you can be upset about that.

Both of these teams exit a bye, but the Rams have a far better ATS record in this spot (7-2-1) than the Giants (4-6). L.A. has also trended favorably of late, covering in three of its four October games, while the Giants have done just the opposite.

Diving into the matchup, the Rams bring in their second-ranked scoring offense to face the team ranked 17th by the same metric. Todd Gurley, who has broken the 100-rushing-yard plateau in four of his last five games, looks poised for another big performance on the ground against the Giants' 23rd-ranked run stoppers.

Eli Manning's 30th-rated scoring offense should face plenty of resistance from the Rams' 10th-best defense by points allowed. He'll also be under duress from L.A.'s solid pass rush, which has amassed 23 sacks through seven games. All signs point to a convincing road win for the Rams. They're the best bet of the week.
The pick: Rams -3.5

Broncos at Eagles (-7.5)
Denver has failed to register 20 points in five straight games, going 1-4 ATS in that span. The Eagles, who have won and covered in five straight, have scored no fewer than 26 points in each game during that streak. And Philly's offense has gotten stronger since their latest victory, as they added Jay Ajayi to their backfield. He should complement an offense that's already second-best in time of possession and fifth in rushing YPG.

Trevor Siemian, at a 76.8 passer rating and falling fast, has been a turnover machine of late, tossing six INTs in his last three starts. He's contributed in large part to Denver's ghastly minus-9 turnover differential over the last three games. The Eagles, by contrast, are plus-5 for the season, among the best marks in the league.
The pick: Eagles -7.5

Cardinals (-2) at 49ers
Arizona lost Carson Palmer to injury in Week 7 and now turn to Drew Stanton, who in one start against the Niners last year managed just a 77.1 passer rating. Adrian Peterson, brought in to salvage a running attack ranked last in the NFL, seemed to be a one-week wonder after a no-show performance against the Rams two weeks ago.

The Cardinals are 0-4 ATS on the road this year and have dropped three of their last four ATS against San Francisco. This should be the week the Niners get their elusive first victory of the season.
The pick: 49ers +2

Aries Offer kindness, compassion and reasonable suggestions. A partnership can flourish if you are willing to compromise and lay down some ground rules.

Taurus An unexpected turn of events will leave you wondering what to do next. If you gather proper information, you'll realize you have nothing to worry about.

Gemini Make a big splash if you want to be noticed. Your ability to adapt to whatever comes your way will give you a competitive edge. Romance is in the stars.

Cancer A steady pace will get you where you want to go. Discipline, hard work and the willingness to help others will help you counter any negativity you feel or face.

Leo Don't let an opportunity pass you by just because you are being stubborn. Work around your differences. A personal change will be rewarding.

Virgo Don't bend if someone tries to goad you into making a donation or signing a deal. Negotiate on your own behalf. Ask pertinent questions before you proceed.

Libra Change is inevitable. Discipline will be required to manipulate a situation to your liking. Relationships, when handled properly, will stabilize. Keep the peace.

Scorpio Push hard to bring about the changes that will help you get ahead at work or where your personal finances are concerned. Persistence will pay off in the end.

Sagittarius Home improvements, physical alterations and stabilizing personal elements are favored. Make love and romance a priority. Pitch in and help a cause you care about.

Capricorn An emotional disturbance could result in problems with a friend or neighbor. Don't do something you'll regret when you should be concentrating on getting ahead.

Aquarius If you love someone, share your feelings. A joint venture can change the way you earn your keep. Embrace new beginnings and partnerships that offer stability.

Pisces An unexpected change will turn out to be a blessing. Embrace what comes your way. Going against the current will cause a stalemate. EUGENIA LAST
